

Abstract

A camera acquires destination information, then accepts an instruction for capturing an image, and sends the captured image data to a destination indicated in the destination information. Accordingly, this camera can protect the user from missing 5 the next shutter opportunity while transmitting the image, or from neglecting to transmit the captured image data due to the bothersome nature of the task.